

Sofía and the Night at the Dinosaur Museum

a story to read and color, starring the Reyes family

The Reyes family goes to the dinosaur museum. “¡Mira!” says Mateo. Look! The bones are taller than the house!

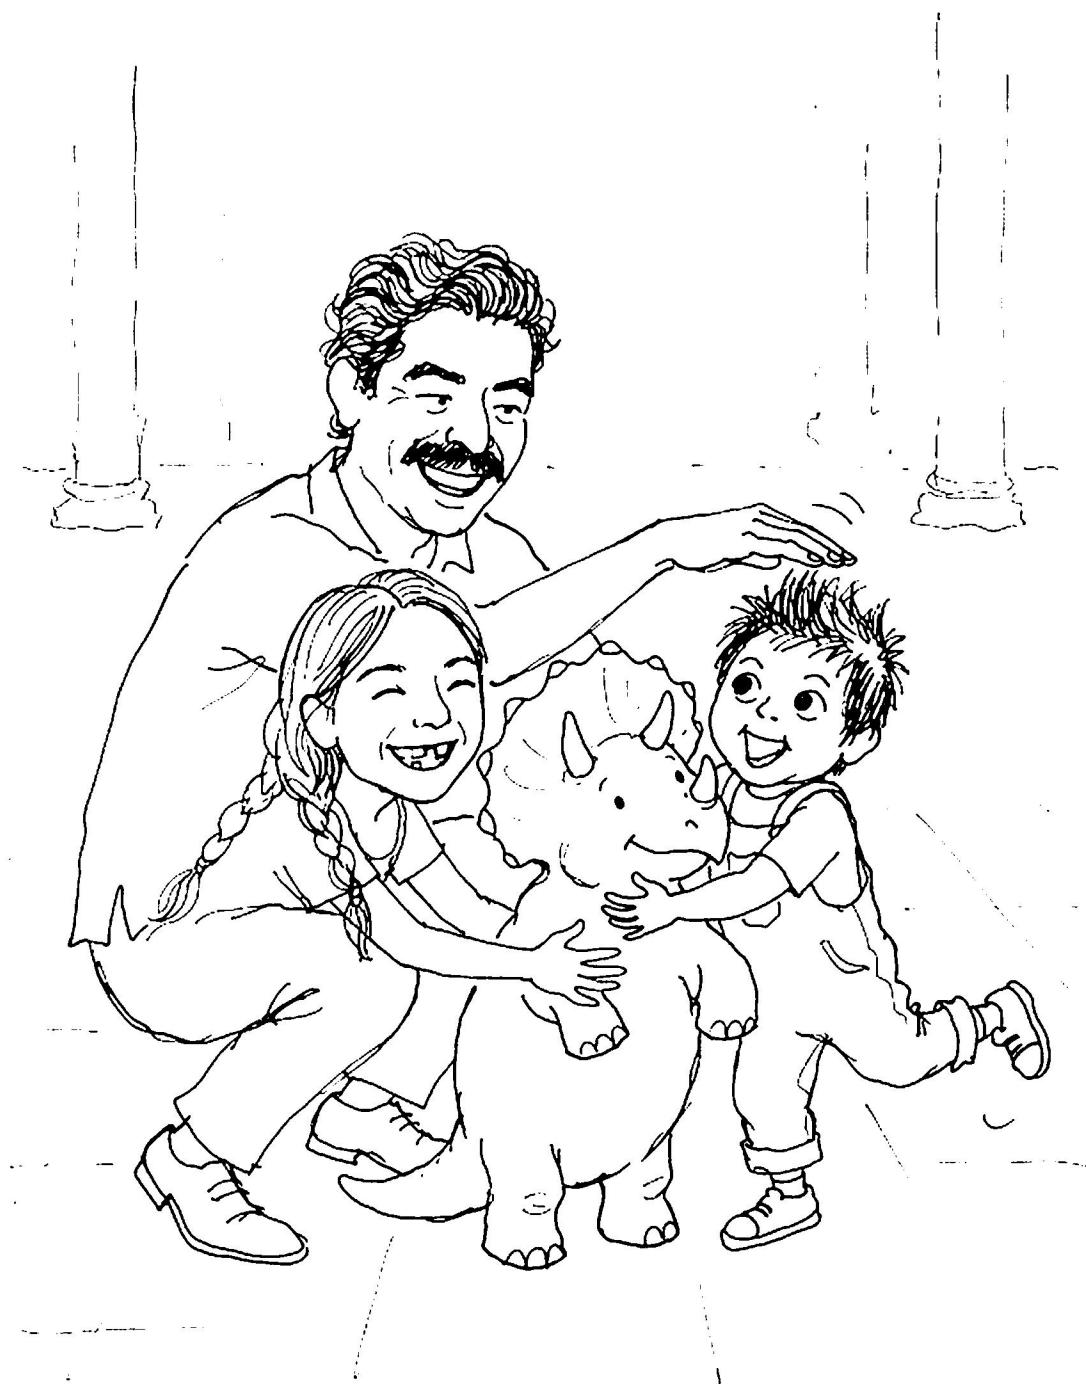

Sofía finds a little egg behind the ropes. It wiggles. It cracks. Out pops a baby triceratops! “Hola, Pico,” she says.

When the lights go out, the museum wakes up. STOMP.
STOMP. Do dinosaurs eat plants or meat? Pico eats plants, crunch crunch.

But Pico is sad. He has lost his mamá. “We’ll help you,” says Papá. “Families stick together.”

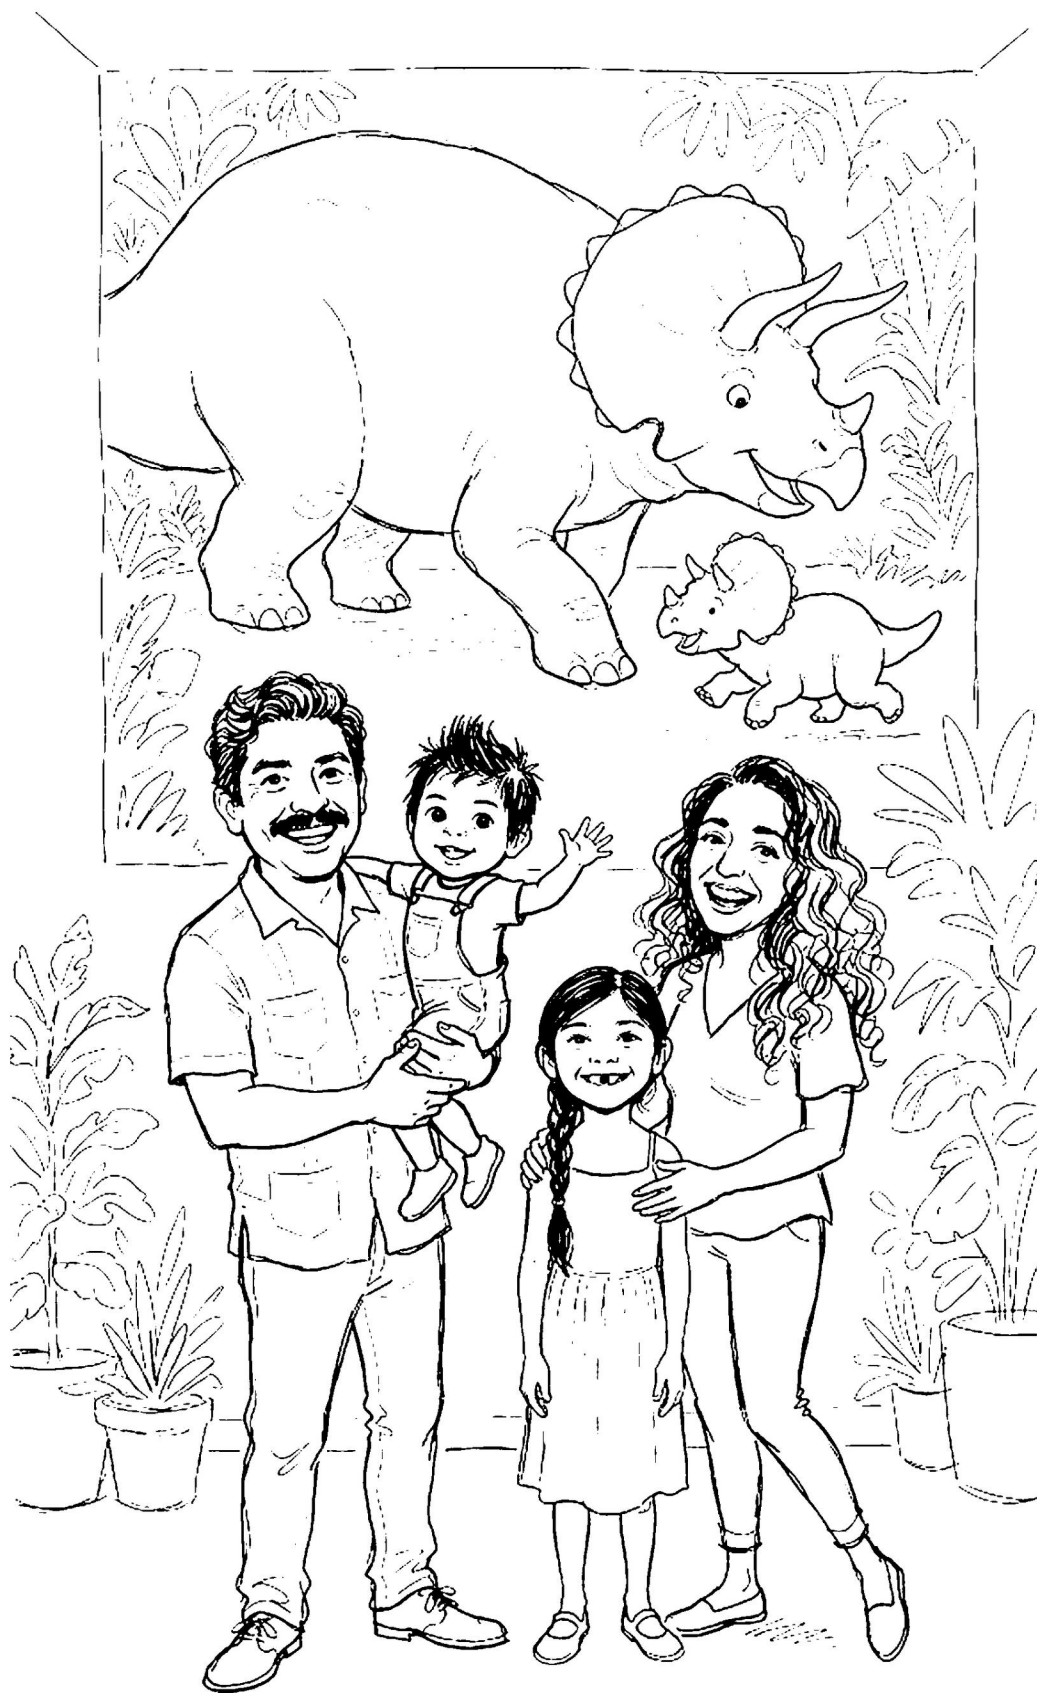

They tiptoe past a T. rex. It has big teeth and tiny arms. It just wants a hug! Can you count its teeth?

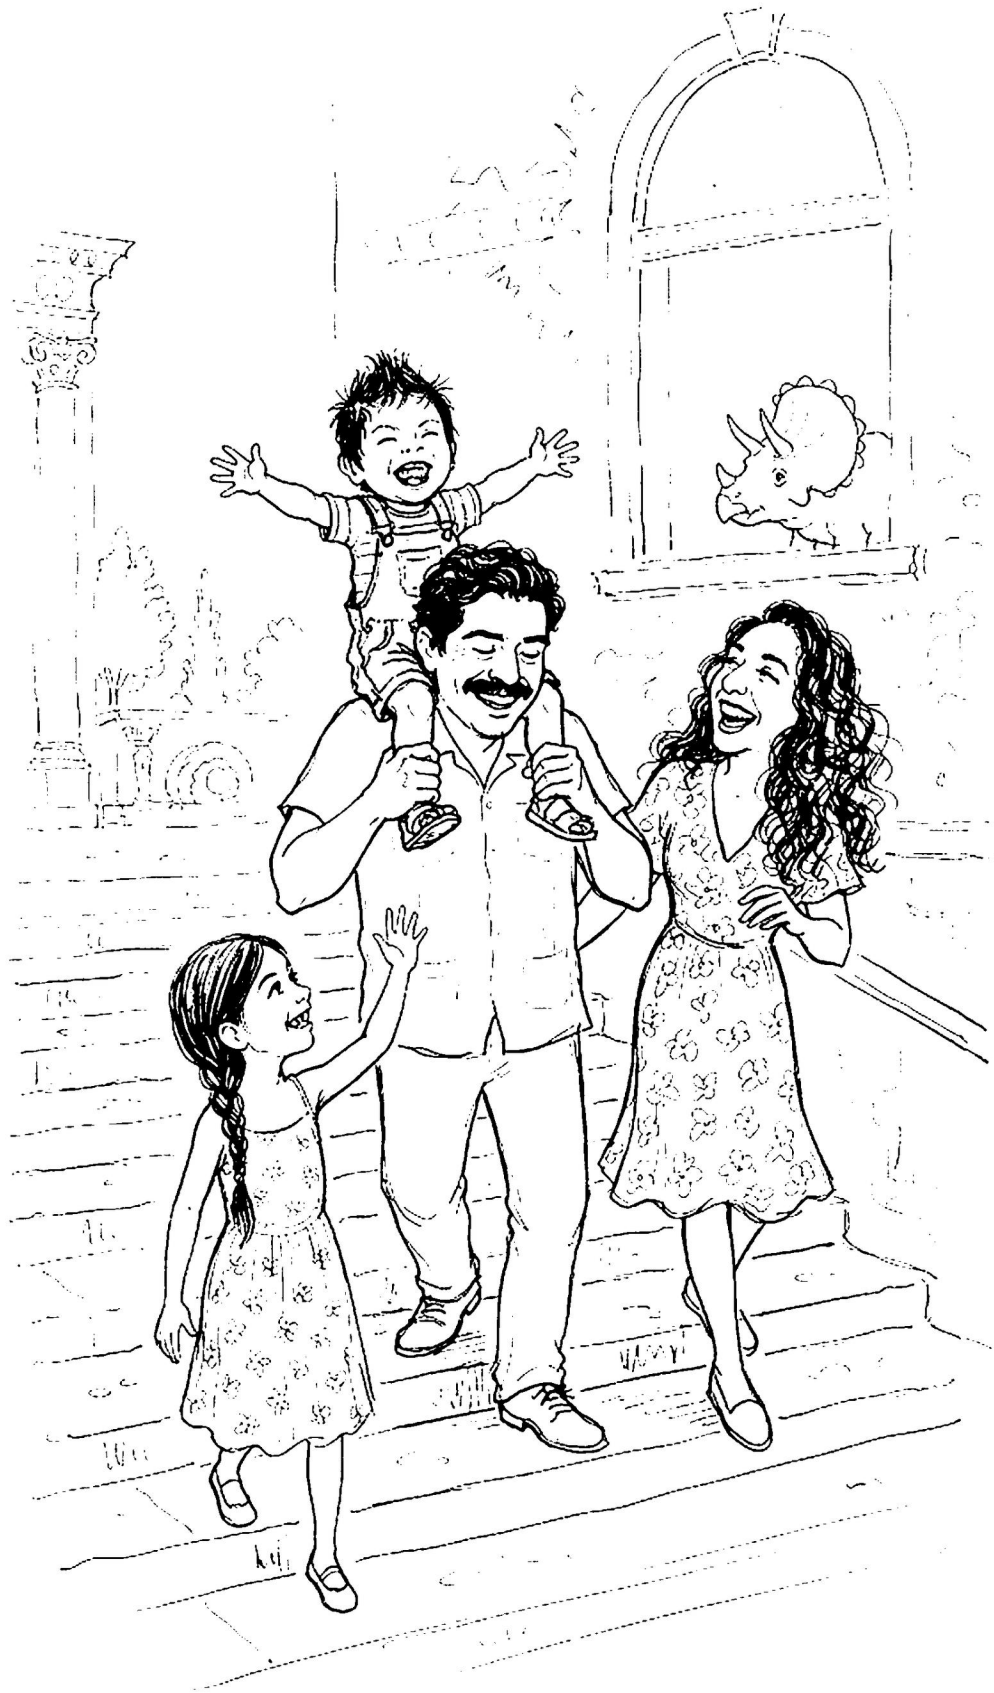

To reach the top floor, Sofia must cross the long, wobbly rope bridge. She feels scared. She says it out loud. Then she goes, one step at a time.

There she is! A big triceratops mamá, painted on the biggest wall of all. And she is waking up too. “¡Mamá!” squeaks Pico.

In the morning, everything is still. But Sofía knows. And on the way home, Mateo roars the whole way. RAWR! ¡Adiós, Pico!
